Won Supreme Honor for Contralto Soloist at Moose Jaw Last Week

The many friends of Mrs. R. A. Telfer will be glad to hear of her success at the Provincial Musical Festival held at Moose Jaw on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of last week, when she was awarded the gold medal for the best Contralto professional soloist. There were five other competitors. Two solos were rendered, the final test being on Tuesday evening in the armoury before a gathering that filled the huge building to overflowing, when Mrs. Telfer won the supreme honor and was highly commended for her excellent rendering of the test piece.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

On Monday afternoon Mrs. Bigelow, Provincial Organizer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, gave a very inspiring address in Trinity Sunday School room.

Taken from Christ's sermon on the Mount, Mrs. F. S. Richardson emphasized the power of prayer to combat forces of evil. Mrs. Bigelow gave a very brief account of the W. C. T. U. from its incipient stages down to the present. She made special mention of the men and women who laid the foundations of the Temperance movement. Partizanship and politics were responsible for the curse that liquor has brought on our country. Abraham Lincoln said that when liquor got into the finances of his country it was more disastrous than the civil war.

The W. C. T. U. stood four square to the world. They sought no self aggrandisement. They had no selfish ambitions; It was a power for good in fifty countries of the world. It was the largest organization of christain women in the world. It had no sectarian barriers. It was an organization of the world's motherhood for the peace, purity and protection of the world's home.

The work that the W. C. T. U. and what it stands for, needs to be kept before the public. She told of young girls who had been rescued from procurators by means of the little white ribbon emblem. The traveller's aids have also kept young girls from falling into the hands of white slavers. She also dealt with the necessity of having women upon school boards. United States has total prohibition to-day because for several decades they have been teaching scientific temperance in their schools. What is the use of educating a boy in all the "ologys" and "isms" etc., if he paralyzed his brain with drink. She urged the women to not relax their efforts to be prepared for the vote in October regarding the importation of liquor into this Province. They did nobly in casting their first vote and there must be no feeling of apathy, indifference or slackness on their part in the coming referendum.

A cordial vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Bigelow for her splendid address.

Miss Mazie Mabole favoured the audience with a vocal selection. She was accompanied on the piano by Miss Letha Scott.

J. L. HAYCOCK'S VIEWS

Superannuation He Claims is an Act Against Thrift

J. L. Haycock, Ex-M.P.P., writing in the Farmer's Sun, says:

I am opposed to superannuation because I believe it to be wrong in principal, unsound in economy, and contrary to good business practice.

We should seek to encourage industry and thrift, but by saying to any class that "when you are time at a certain age or condition your future is provided for," we, to a certain extent weaken the habits of thrift and economy. If a man had three or four boys whose future he was anxious to be a success, would he say to them that he had made arrangements that when they came to a certain period or condition of life they would be provided for? Would not that be a dangerous thing to do. Would it not have a tendency to make them careless as to the future?

Even the bees in climates where there is perpetual summer become indolent and fail to provide a store for winter. If any class in the community is given to understand that it is unnecessary for them to provide for the winter of old age, or loss of earning power, will not the same natural laws produce the same effects?

The fact that private concerns adopt the pension system does not alter the principle and the circumstances are different. In the one case (the private concerns) it is difficult to get men and retain them on account of the greater labor and greater exertion required from them, while in the case of the Civil Service there does not appear to be a lack of applicants for the positions nor a great desire to vacate them and therefore the argument fails.

A Retort.

At a political meeting held in a provincial town in England a crowded audience had assembled to support a parliamentary candidate. During the speech of the candidate a man put his head in at the door and shouted in a stentorian voice: "Can anyone here sell me six pennyworth of sense?" The speaker halted, evidently quite dumbfounded; but the chairman of the meeting immediately silenced the intruder by retorting: "Yes, but you have nothing to put it in."

TWO VILLAGES BURNED

Forest Fires Sweep Maritime Provinces

Londonderry Village Has Been Wiped Out In Nova Scotia and the Mines Were Also Partially Destroyed—In New Brunswick the Chester Visited St. Quentin, and Thousands of People Are Homeless.

ST. JOHN, N.B., June 1. — The little village of St. Quentin, in Restigouche county, N.B., on the line of the Canadian National Railways, about forty miles from St. Leonard's, was almost entirely wiped out Friday as the result of forest fires, which have been raging in the crown lands in Restigouche during the past ten days.

St. Quentin was a thriving village of about 2,000 population, and was a centre for the lumber and pulp operations.

The fire, which resulted in a monetary loss variously estimated from $750,000 to $1,000,000, started in the millyard of J. E. Michaud, extending from burning embers carried by the winds from the forest blaze. Before it had spent its fury seventy buildings, three mills, two hotels, the Canadian National Railways Station, the Provincial Bank and many business places were wiped out. About 1,000 people, or half the population, were rendered homeless, and saved none of their personal property except what they had on their backs. Relief trains were sent out from St. Leonard's and Campbellton Saturday to convey the homeless to places of refuge where they could be cared for. No lives were lost.

Besides the destruction to homes and business places, much manufactured lumber, thousands of cords of pulpwood and thousands of railroad ties at nearby mills and lumber shipments were burned. Seven carloads of lumber on the track were also consumed.

The forest fire situation in New Brunswick is reported somewhat improved, according to Chief Forester Percy Prince. The fire at Glenelg, Sunbury county, has been extinguished, and those which had been sweeping Restigouche country are reported under control.

A new outbreak has occurred about ten miles from Salisbury, Westmoreland county. The Warden for that district, however, reported to headquarters that it was not of a serious nature, and he hoped to check it before it had made much headway.

Fires reported near Plaster Rock and Perth, in Victoria county, are still burning, so far as known.

Fires In Nova Scotia.

HALIFAX, N.S., June 1.—Forest fires which are raging in various parts of Nova Scotia assumed a serious aspect in Cumberland county. The situation in the vicinity of Maitland, Hants county, is alarming. Residents of that place say that only a sudden change of wind has saved Maitland from whole or partial destruction Saturday. The timber lands near Latter Brook, seven miles from Maitland, are now ablaze, and flames are making rapid progress through the woods toward Selma, not far away.

It is believed in Maitland that unless the fire is placed under control very shortly Selma will be burned out. There are about one hundred families in this village, and all the able-bodied men, and even some of the women and children, are reported to be engaged in fighting back the fire fiend. In fact the people from all the adjoining districts have sent their quota of fire-fighters, and trained services have been called to stay the blaze under control. It was said that the fire is not burning with the same rapidity and fury as on Friday, but that it was still beyond control and that it is at present fanned by a fairly strong wind.

At Gold River, near Chester, the situation is not so serious. The fire district is under control, and unless a high wind develops the men expected to extinguish it by night.

Fires are also reported in the wood around Montague, Halifax county. These have been burning for two days, but are not considered dangerous, although they will cause considerable loss of timber.

Londonderry Mines, 20 miles from Truro, was partly destroyed by fire Saturday. Four churches, a schoolhouse, and half-and-about a dozen dwellings already have been burned. There was no loss of life.

Saturday a fierce forest fire was burning in Hardwood Hill, a short distance from Londonderry Mines, and this was at first supposed to have been the origin of Sunday's destructive blaze, which destroyed nine o'clock. It was found, however, that the fire was started by sparks from the chimney of a house owned by Archie Davis, and fanned by the high wind it spread rapidly. The fire swept a district three-quarters of a mile in length and a mile in width.

The flames swept the main street of the village, consuming in a short time the Anglican Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Roman Catholic Church, Glebe House, St. Bridget's Hall, a school building and a number of houses. It crossed the stream which runs through the village, but the wind it spread rapidly. The fire swept a district three-quarters of a mile in length and a mile in width.

The forty odd families rendered homeless are being sheltered by their more fortunate neighbors. The loss is estimated to be from two and three hundred thousand dollars, with only small insurance.

MOB FREES PRISONER

Small Riot Frightens Citizens of Windsor.

Authorities Had Arrested Returned Soldier, But Were Forced to Give Him His Liberty After Windows of Police Station and Council Chamber Had Been Smashed—Policeman's Wife With Revolver Defies Lawless Crowd.

WINDSOR, June 1.—Incited, it is said, by a man recently convicted and heavily fined for illicit trafficking in liquor, a mob of between four and five hundred men, made up of returned soldiers and civilians, surrounded police headquarters in the City Hall here at nine o'clock Saturday night, and after a number of threatening demonstrations forced the police to release Fred McLean, a returned man, who had been arrested a short time before for being drunk and disorderly. The order for the man's release emanated, it is said, from Chief of Police Wills.

The whole affair was apparently spontaneous, but the fact that a mob of such proportions could be so evidently organized within a few minutes to at first defy, then completely upset constituted authority has given the whole city a scare.

McLean, the casus belli, was taken into custody by Patrolman Murray in the downtown section, after a sharp fight, it is said, in which he is said to have been slapped in the face by his prisoner. Murray retaliated by using his night stick freely, and was for this reason, according to some of those who made up the rescuing party, that the attack on police headquarters was instigated.

The mob actually made two visits to the City Hall. Their first attempt at effecting McLean's release being unsuccessful, they returned to it in a body to the residence of Mayor Winter, on Elm avenue, to induce him to order the man released. The mayor was absent, however, and the crowd marched back to the City Hall, stopping on the way to enter a Chinese cafe on Ouellette avenue, where the proprietor was hauled out into the street and badly beaten, according to the police.

On gaining entry at the police station for the second time, the crowd again demanded that McLean be set free. Scenes bordering on fly rescues ensued and windows were smashed both in the police station downstairs and in council chamber of the City Hall on the upper floor.

Chief of Police Wills and Captain Dobson Peacock, secretary of the local branch of the veterans' organization, addressed the crowd endeavoring it to disperse, but no attention was paid to their suggestions. Finally the mob threatened to break open the cell door unlocked and McLean released.

As he appeared outside the crowd began to cheer, and, with McLean in their midst, marched down town singing. Later a number of men called at the home of Police Murray, who had arrested McLean, and demanded to see him, but they were met at the door by Mrs. Murray, who, with a revolver in her hand, ordered the men to leave, threatening that she would shoot the first man who put his foot across her threshold. This had a sobering effect, and the unwelcome callers left.

Crown Attorney J. H. Rodd took the matter up the first thing Sunday morning, and, declaring that the city will not be terrorized by any mob rule or defiance of constituted authority, has ordered a searching investigation to be made. The names of the ringleaders in Saturday night's affair have been secured by the local crown attorney, and drastic action is expected. A special meeting of the Police Commission has also been called to inquire into the reason for the release of McLean.

"He should have been kept in jail, the same as any other law violator, if it took the entire police force of the city to do it," declared one official. Some prominent citizens are of opinion that the freedom with which liquor can be obtained here is responsible, in part at least, for the whole affair.

CZECHS HAVE PARLIAMENT.

First Constitutional Assembly In 300 Years.

LONDON, June 1.—After an interval of 300 years a Parliament of the Czech people has been organized, since 1918, when the Austrian yoke was thrown off, Czecho-Slovakia has been governed by a National Assembly, from which they elected a free and constitutional government.

The first act of the new Parliament, according to a despatch to the Daily News, was to elect Thomas G. Masaryk, the famous Czech leader, to the presidency of the republic. Great interest was taken in the appearance of more than 300 deputies in session in the Chamber. They made several heated protests during the voting, having placed in nomination a candidate of their own against whom the Masaryk vote was five to one. Clerical members refrained from voting.

Announcement of the result led to scenes of great enthusiasm in the Chamber, to the accompaniment of a counter demonstration by the Germans, who sang their dirges and shouted. When the President entered the hall the German deputies quit en bloc. Following the inauguration of the President, members of the two Houses and crowds that thronged visitors' galleries sang Czech and Slovak national anthems; the clericals tried to protest and the Socialists block chanted the "Internationale."

Soviet Sends Mission to China.

LONDON, June 1.—A Soviet mission to China, consisting of members of the Commissariat for foreign affairs and the Russian Soviet Government, arrived at the town of Kuru, according to a Moscow wireless message. The mission expects to strengthen trade and diplomatic relations.

Kaiser Wants Revolt.

LONDON, June 1.—Rumors of an impending revolt are rapidly growing in Berlin, and there are indications that the headquarters of the new monarchist movement are at Potsdam, where Prince August Wilhelm, son of former Emperor William, is staying. He is regarded as the leader of the military party, says a despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. Advices from Doorn, where the former Emperor is now living, declare William Hohenzollern is in high hopes of a successful coup, and believes he will once more become ruler of the German Empire, the despatch says.

MANY TROOPS LANDING.

Lawlessness of Sinn Feiners Will Be Stopped.

DUBLIN, June 1.—Despite obstructions from Irish labor at the ports, disembarkation of troops and material for defensive operations to protect the lives of the country continuing proceeds according to plan. The Cameron Highlanders arrived at Queenstown Monday, and other battalions expected from England are the Devons, Cheshires, and Scottish Borderers. A battery of 18-pounders was landed at Dublin, while the large number of flying corps personnel reaching Ireland suggests that aircraft is intended to play a prominent part in frustrating republican attacks on police barracks and other Government buildings.

Wireless experts and visual signalers are also included among the technical troops which are arriving, and a comprehensive communication scheme to cover the whole of the disaffected area which will make it exceedingly difficult for Sinn Feiners to institute any attack and escape detection. Cavalry patrols also have appeared in Connaught and are engaged in the prevention of cattle driving.

Meanwhile the Sinn Feiners have not abandoned the hope that English labor will make it impossible for the Government to carry out their military program. Here it is recognized that without support across the Irish Channel, the Sinn Fein policy is doomed, and strikes may be expected firmly to discountenance unprovoked attacks on soldiers which would be certain to alienate English working class sympathy.

PRINCE MAKES PROTEST.

Asks Australian Public to Refrain From Crowding Him.

MELBOURNE, June 1. — Enormous crowds still line the streets wherever the Prince of Wales is likely to appear. On several occasions his car has been blocked. One enthusiastic lady took a flag in Admiral Halsey's eye and he will have to take a few days rest as a result. Prince has come to chat with editors of leading Australian papers, the prince proposed that the papers ask the public to refrain from crowding him with such "enormous" enthusiasm.

At an at-home given by the Victoria Government, the prince became so tired of shaking hands that he was forced to discontinue this form of greeting except to the ladies.

The prince inspected the Royal Australian navy at Port Phillips on Saturday. The warships were drawn up in fine lines and the prince boarded the vessel through the flagship the Australia, after inspecting the assembled fleet and returned ashore in the steam yacht.

The Labor Council Mayor of Sydney has invited workmen to attend the royal levee in their working clothes, or dressed how they please.

LINKS OF EMPIRE.

Canada and West Indies Discuss Closer Ties.

OTTAWA, June 1.—Sounding the note of Imperial solidarity, the conference between the West Indies and the Dominion of Canada and it is not too much, I hope, to ask that the Imperial aspect will be steadily kept in view as well and perhaps the after-effects of what is secured at this conference may be extended still further and steps taken in implementing all portions of the Empire by closer bonds and closer ties."

Sir Robert Borden said the opportunities for trade between the West Indies and Canada were so obvious that "it strikes me we should be derelict in our duty if we did not take advantage of them."

FRANCE UPHOLDS CANADA.

But Does Not Consider India on Same Basis as Dominions.

Recent speeches by Hon. Arthur Meighen and Hon. N. W. Rowell emphasizing Canada's determination to take an important part in the League of Nations despite the attitude of the United States, have been forwarded to the Colonial Office in London and have been read with great attention. The reports of the speeches in the British press have caused some surprise and comment, as the movement has been contemplated in England that the Mother Country should sacrifice the rights of Canada or any other Dominion in opposition of the Empire to meet the wishes of the United States. This was made plain in Lord Grey's letter, in which he explained the American attitude to the British public.

The Colonial Office is very chary of its comments in connection with the matter, but this is due to the desire not to create prejudice while the case is still sub judice as far as the United States is concerned, and not because the British Government has anything to conceal as regards its support of Canada's case.

As regards the other Allies, the French attitude is favorable to the Canadian contention. The statement of a French Minister a few days ago was that France thought that Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, as self-governing nations were entitled to separate membership, but did not consider the case of India was on the same basis, inasmuch as it was no more self-governing than some of the French native colonies.

France makes no objection to the present voting strength of the British Empire, but it is proposed to increase the United States' voting power to six she will ask to be placed on the same footing.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, June 1.—With around 2000 fresh cattle on the Union Stock Yards yesterday there was a brisk demand for all classes of handy weight butcher cattle, but the heavy class cattle was inclined to drag a little. Good butcher cows were wanted and realized good prices. The better class of milkers and springers realized steady prices, but the common class were slow.

With around 500 calves and 350 sheep and lambs, the market for calves held about even with last week, but the sheep trade was slow and weaker, with lambs holding about steady.

The run of hogs was around 3000, with the general trend of the market running at $18.75 to the farmer, $19 f.o.b. and $19.50 fed and watered.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, May 31.—(Dominion Live Stock Branch)—Cattle, receipts 266. There was a good stiff trade in cattle this morning at prices estimated to be 50c or 75c higher than those of last week. There were two loads of real choice cattle, weighing on an average about 1,250 pounds each, sold by Lionel Amery, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies and, purchased by Sir George Foster, Hon. C. C. Ballantyne, and Hon. Martin Burrell. Sir Henry Drayton is also a delegate, but was unable to be present on Monday.

"In this conference," said the Governor-General, "the principal subjects of discussion will be the relations between the West Indies and the Dominion of Canada and it is not too much, I hope, to ask that the Imperial aspect will be steadily kept in view as well and perhaps the after-effects of what is secured at this conference may be extended still further and steps taken in implementing all portions of the Empire by closer bonds and closer ties."

Baby Drowns in Cistern.

PARIS, Ont., June 1. — Russell, the 19-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Rowles, was drowned Saturday at Paris Station. It seems that the child was playing with children on an adjoining neighbor was defective, and the little toddler, straying from his mother, in passing the cistern broke through and, falling in, was drowned. The jury rendered a verdict of accidental death.

Will Swim English Channel.

LONDON, June 1. — Mrs. Arthur Hamilton, daughter of Sir Charles Fairlie-Cunninghame, is now training for an attempt to swim the English Channel in August.

"I am doing a five-mile swim every evening before dinner," she says.

Mrs. Hilda Willing, of Rochester, Kent, is also to attempt in August to be the first woman to emulate Captain Webb.

There is a great shortage of paper bags, due to the scarcity of white paper.

20,000 Steel Men Idle In England.

LONDON, June 1.—Twenty thousand workers in the steel industry in the Sheffield and Rotherham districts are idle in connection with the proposal to introduce a three-shift system. The proposal affects six unions, five of which were willing to accept. Two thousand firemen belonging to the six unions, however, refused to accept the change, and so, thus obliging the others to remain idle.

HAS NO PAIN NOW

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did for Mrs. Peasey of London.

London, Ont.—"I suffered with periodic pains, was weak and run down, could not eat and had headaches. The worst symptoms were dragging down pains so bad I sometimes thought I would go crazy and I seemed to be smothering. I was in this condition for two or three years and could not seem to work. I tried all kinds of remedies and had been treated by physicians, but received no benefit. I found one of your booklets and felt inclined to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I received the best results from it, and now I keep house and go out to work and am like a new woman. I have recommended your Vegetable Compound to my friends, and if these facts will help some poor woman use them as you please."—Mrs. J. P. PEASEY, 200 Rectory Street, London Ont.

The reason women write such letters to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. and tell their friends how they are helped is that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and happiness into their lives. Freed from their illness they want to pass the good news along to other suffering women that they also may be relieved.

If there are any complications you do not understand write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Bible In Manuscript.

The largest Bible in existence is in the Royal Library at Stockholm. The covers are made of solid planks four inches thick, and the pages each measure a yard in length. It is estimated that a hundred asses' skins must have been used to furnish the 300 parchment leaves of the book, which is considered priceless.

A well-to-do resident of New York is the proud possessor of a manuscript Bible written by his only son, a cripple. It does not contain a single error or slip, for if error or slip occurred the youth discarded the whole page. The verses and readings are all in red ink, and the whole is beautifully written.

In a house in Grafton street, London, there is a shorthand Bible, which was written at least two centuries before Pitman was born. It was written by an apprentice in the days of James II., when to possess a "common or garden" Bible was rather dangerous.

A lady in America cherishes a Bible which an ancestress baked in a loaf of bread when a house-to-house search was being made for stray copies of the Scriptures. The soldiers came to search the house, but it is not a matter of wonder that they failed to find the book.—Tit-Bits.

Lighthouse as a Home.

The housing problem in England has reached such an acute stage that every available kind of abode is being utilized for living quarters. Even old lighthouses are being used for this purpose.

One of these, the South Foreland Lighthouse, lying between Dover and Deal, has been converted into a private residence and is now for sale. This structure is about one hundred years old. The former light room has been turned into a comfortable smoking apartment.

Soldier Poet Died Young

THE war brought forth many poets. Among them Charles Hamilton Sorley holds a distinctive if not a distinguished place. Death came to him when he had seen less than a half-year of service, for soon after the beginning of the battle of Loos he fell at the head of his company as he was leading it against the enemy. He was only twenty years of age, but he had in him the makings of a man who would have been of conspicuous service to the world.

Born in the midst of and brought up in academic surroundings, young Sorley's intellectual life began early. His father was Professor of Moral Philosophy in Aberdeen University, and he first saw the light in that ancient Scottish town on May 19, 1895. His ancestors on both sides were Lowland Scots from the lands between the Tay and the Tweed. When he was five years old his parents removed to Cambridge, where his father had been appointed Knightbridge Professor, and there he was educated at home and in the local schools until he entered Marlborough College in the autumn of 1908, gaining in 1913 a scholarship at University College which he was destined never to avail himself of. It was thought best for his father to give him a short tour on the continent as a break between public school and university, and the war came while he was homeward bound on his way through Germany. He reached home after slight difficulties on August 6, applied immediately for a commission in the army, and impatient at the delay was about to enlist as a private when he read his name in the Gazette as a second lieutenant in the seventh battalion of the Suffolk Regiment. By the time he went to France in May, he was a lieutenant, and he was soon advanced to a captaincy, which rank he held at the time of his death.

The beginning of his school life as a day-boy at the King's College Choir School in Cambridge broadened the awakening mind which had received its first stimulus under his mother's home tutelage. In company with his twin brother, his earlier education had consisted chiefly in singing and marching games in French and English, history stories and fairy stories, reading aloud from the Bible and the Pilgrim's Progress, and the learning by heart of passages from Shakespeare, Scott, Macaulay and Blake. In neither of the boys could be aroused any interest in natural history. Charles' father's method was a real school. "He always wanted to grow up, and this was a stage further on. Each new experience—whether game or book or place or human being—came as an adventure to him; he always criticised eagerly, but he reaped and remembered only the best—nothing else counted." When he went to Marlborough College he was separated from his brother, and they were together during their holidays and they looked forward to the university life that they were fated never to share.

When he entered Marlborough, the school at first absorbed him entirely. "He had a period of hero-worship, very little qualified by criticism, for its demigods among the boys and masters; he abounded in the mysteries of its etiquette and slang; and he would pore by the hour over the blue School List, declaring that he knew by headmark most of the boys in it, which may very well have been the case, as he had a quick memory for names and faces. His attitude towards the school, though essentially loyal and filial, developed in breadth and humor as he found freedom and read and thought for himself. The outdoor life of the school appealed no less to him because his mind was so eager to find and follow the literary ideas of the time. He was especially interested in football, but what he liked best was to tramp, to run, and to ride his bicycle over the surrounding country.

From his earliest boyhood he was accustomed to writing down what came into his mind, and his earliest efforts took the form of long screeds of heroic verse modelled on Scott and Macaulay. "Later," says his mother, "he indulged in stories of the 'shocker' sort, which he used to tell in the dormitory at night as the work of one Jonathan Armstrong. As he grew older he became more and more reserved about his writing. Though his family knew vaguely of his connection with the school magazine, The Marlburian, he never saw fit to enlighten them on the subject." The Master of Marlborough College writes especially that he was a rebel against convention, and that although he had in him the making of a good classical scholar he revolted against the routine of classical education. "In fact Latin literature as a whole failed to appeal to him, whilst he found satisfaction for his soul in the greater passion and idealism of Greek. He was a voracious reader of English literature, but was fastidious. Tennyson and Browning he could not away with. He thought they were imbued with Victorian priggishness and smugness. He was an ardent admirer of authors like Richard Jefferies and John Masefield." And it was apparently easy for him to discover the best things in modern verse. From the anthology of Georgian poetry, he selects as very striking the work of "two poets with strange names," Lascelles Abercrombie and Walter de la Mare, and he notes as "the poet of the tramp and vagabond," Wilfrid Wilson Gibson, whom he had previously come across in the pages of the English Review. "And I'm blest," he remarks, "if the truest poem in the book isn't by Chesterton! It is certainly a surprising book, and I am glad to have it."

Harrod's.

"Everything under one roof" will be the motto of a new department store which Harrod's, of London, is to build to take the place of its old store in Brompton Cross. It is to be three times the size of the present place, being eight floors in height and containing nine acres of floor space. Work has already begun, and the first section of the new establishment is expected to open in about a year, while it is hoped that the entire premises will be in working order within eighteen months. After the realization of its present undertaking it is planned to establish a chain of stores throughout Argentina similar to those which it is now operating in English cities.

How Some English Towns Try Business Ventures To Relieve Tax Payers

SEVERAL towns in England make money for the purpose of helping the rate payer.

Doncaster, for example, has a racecourse which brings in a handsome profit—probably a five-figure sum—yearly. Doncaster races, always popular "with the crowd," have been in existence since the sixteenth century, and must therefore have earned an enormous sum for the town in their time.

Plymouth Corporation are the owners of an hotel, the Royal, and a theatre, which bring in yearly revenue of over £2,000. Incidentally the theatre, which has been in the town's possession for over one hundred years, is one of the most popular in the provinces.

Although the rates of Liverpool do not directly benefit thereby, the city has its money back in full, and it, which is visited by thousands every year. An exhibition is held each autumn, the profits from which go towards enriching the permanent collection to the gallery.

In only one case is a university in this country the property of the town in which it stands. The exception is Nottingham, and there is no doubt that its presence has been a great benefit to the city. During the past year the rates of Nottingham have been helped by contributions from its gas department, its tramways and building estate, and various markets and fairs.

Probably Saltash is the only town in the country that owns a church. It was built by the corporation so long ago as the eleventh century. The mayor is church warden, and in that capacity, up to a few years ago, he allotted the sittings, whence money was obtained.

Bristol owns a College of Domestic Subjects, including a Cookery School, and although no money is actually made out of the concern—on the contrary the town contributes towards its maintenance—the citizens regard it as being in many ways a good investment.

The Valley Bridge at Scarborough is the property of the corporation, which, until a month or so ago, levied tolls on passengers and vehicles using the bridge, and although the money thus made did not benefit the rates, the bridge itself is looked upon as being a wise provision for the town.

The Corporation of Halifax are the owners of a stone quarry, from which paving material is obtained for use in the town.—Pearson's Weekly.

Why Dogs' Noses Are Cold.

When your faithful old dog pokes his nose into your hand, even your affection cannot prevent a little shiver, because the nose is so cold. Why is it? When the body of a dog is so warm, why should this one spot be different from all the rest of him?

The old fable tells us when Noah tried to get all the animals into the ark some of them were troublesome, and he had to get a dog to help him drive them in. Because of this the dog was the last to enter the ark. There was no room left, so he had to stand in the doorway with his nose outside in the wet, and it has never been warm since.

Science gives quite another explanation of the matter. The coldness of a dog's nose is due to the fact that it must be kept moist all the time in order to sharpen his sense of smell. And, of course, as the moisture is evaporating all the time, it keeps his nose cold.

A dog depends a great deal on his powers of smell, especially in the wild state, and it is because of his keenness of scent that he is valuable to man for hunting purposes. In addition to the olfactory or smelling nerves inside a dog's nostrils, the whole black membrane around the nose is very sensitive, but this sensitiveness can only be retained by moisture. Thus it is when a dog's nose is dry and warm he is ill and needs doctoring.

Prince of Wales Likes Stamps.

The proposal of the Newfoundland Post Office to issue a special postage stamp in commemoration of the Prince of Wales' tour of Canada and Newfoundland will meet with general approbation. Stamp collectors the world over will welcome the opportunity of adding one more vignette to the series of stamp portraits of their fellow philatelist already presented on the postal issues of Britain's oldest colony.

It was in August, 1898, that the likeness of Prince Edward of York, then in the first flush of manhood, first appeared (in company with those of other members of the British Royal Family) on the ½-cent stamp of Newfoundland. The prince was next presented in the uniform of a cadet at the Royal Naval College on the three-cent denomination of the Newfoundland "Coronation" postage stamp series of June 14, 1911.

Stamp collecting is, with the Prince of Wales, as with his royal father, a favorite hobby, and when in London he is frequently to be seen in the lending stamp dealers' establishments in search of new acquisitions for his extensive collections. The stamp issues of British North America have long possessed a special fascination for him, and it would not be surprising to learn that his recent tour had brought him some notable specimens of these issues. Newfoundland, in particular, with its range of artistic line-engraved stamps, is well represented in the Prince of Wales' collection.

Specialized collections of the French colonies and Libra have likewise been formed by the Prince of Wales, whose philatelic predilections cover a wide range. Early in the present year he consented to become honorary president of the Royal Philatelic Society, an office held for many years by King George prior to his accession.

The Great Britain section of the famous "Worthington" collection, formerly the most important in the United States, was taken to England and by London firm, by whom it is to be broken up. Among other choice items the collection contains the rare 9d plate 5 in mint condition. The last specimen of this rarity to come on the market was donated by King George to the stamp auction in aid of the British Red Cross, where it was purchased by the same firm for £550.

Cost of New Buildings.

The new Parliament Buildings cost $6,954,116.15 to February 28 last, according to a return tabled in the House of Commons. The contractors are to receive eight per cent. on the total cost of the building, dating from February 3, 1916, up to the amount of $4,000,000, and seven per cent. on the cost in excess up to $1,000,000. It being understood and agreed that they are not to receive commission on the cost in excess of $5,000,000. The architects receive five and a half per cent. on the total cost of the work of reconstructing the Parliament Buildings, this commission not to apply to an amount not exceeding $5,000,000.

Frequent Treatment.

A negro mammy had four boys who were so polite and well-behaved that they excited the interest of the mammy's mistress.

"Mandy," said the mistress one day, "how did you manage to raise your boys so well?"

"Ah'll tell you, missus," replied Mandy. "Ah raise dem boys with a barrel stave, and Ah raised 'em frequent."

Land for Soldiers.

The State of New South Wales has made available for repatriated soldiers 6,000,000 acres of land, according to a statement by Minister of Lands Asford, who states that about 4,000 former service men will have been placed in settlement.

Comprised in the available area are 1,620 crown lands in the central and eastern divisions, 128 in the western division, 375 in the irrigation regions, 1,475 resumed under Government acts, and $50 for intense culture. Up to date upward of $15,000,000 worth of property has been approved for purchase as part of the repatriation scheme, some of which, however, will not be made available until late this year.

Gift to Albert Museum Of Rare Old Porcelain Has an Historic Value

A PORCELAIN bequest of unusual interest has recently been received by the Victoria and Albert Museum, London, England, which goes far to fill a serious gap in the museum collections. Though interesting specimens of Chelsea, Frankenthal, Ludwigsburg, Vienna, and Hochst are included, by far the greater part of the bequest consists of choice examples of the porcelain modeled by Johann Joachim Kaendler and his pupils, some of the more important examples being worthy of detailed description.

The interest in oriental dress and manners characteristic of the eighteenth century and illustrated by the "Turkish habits" dear to Defoe and Lady Mary Wortley Montagu is shown by two excellently modeled figures a la Turque and a la Chinoise. The first is a man in loose blue trousers, a white turban, a white coat over a fleeced waistcoat of primrose brocade embroidered with flowers, a gold sash with heavy tassels, pink shoes, a guitar slung from his shoulders with a scarlet riband, and his attitude that of a lover singing to his lady. Finer still is the Chinese, in soft robes of blue and pink with loose cap feathered into a tassel, dancing and yet statuesque, a combination of rare charm. Near these fantasies are figures from daily life, a scarcely tinted player on the hurdy-gurdy, peasants dancing, or ladies and gentleman a la Watteau; but it is harder to place two strange groups of ladies with curled and powdered hair and dainty ribbons riding on goats and carrying each a tiny baby. Their faces are Madonna-like, sweet and serious, their dress those of their time and class; only their settings are fantastic. An obvious pendant to these groups is the parody beside them, a tailor riding on a goat, brandishing a great pair of scissors, his holsters filled not with pistols but with buttons, thread, and patterns.

Here stands the eternal type of youth and affection, Harlequin and Columbine, he in white dress and black scarf-hood hanging from his forehead, she is dainty dress, strangely unsatellite, holding the dove, her namesake, in a cage; a harmony in black and white, with rare touches of primrose, blue and red to enhance its effect. The same coloring is used upon a dainty figure of a youth in winter dress, bearing his sledge upon his shoulders, and, though the color here is richer, upon the charming little figure of Barbara Uttmann, who is traditionally said to have introduced this form of industry into sixteenth century Westphalia, bending over her lace pillow.

The Court Arcadia could hardly be absent from an art so courtly; here is a dainty shepherd with his tiers of powdered curls bending over a lady en bergere, singing to her lute beneath an oak tree, her lamb at her feet. The Carnival Mask again—that aspect of courtly life appears in a figure which might have stepped out of a canvas by Longhi, with his loose white robe with pink and yellow bows, his black three-cornered hat and his white mask with the false nose. Here is Cupid a la Pompadour, being dressed by fair attendants, one of whom crowns him with flowers. An epitome of Belinda's toilet this, which to imagine is but to take up "The Rape of the Lock"; mirror, essences, the open patch-box, all the dainty scene is here to view.

Children indeed, cupids, seasons, and little laughing mortals aping their elders, or engaged in childish play, are all here; a rosy Pierrot with mask and high pink hat; a Cupid and Psyche among flowers; a delicious group of children round an apple tree, one urchin in its boughs throwing the ruddy prizes down to his brother and sister, who gather them in basket and apron. Much more successful these than the mythological figures, Diane Chasseresse riding in spangled robes, Mars in the high boots and falsely made cuirass of the eighteenth century stage, or Venus and Cupid, the latter woefully tubby and Teutonic. With these must be ranked the lamentable Virgin, standing on a blue globe and supported by cherubs, gilt rays of a painful solidity streaming from her head. Truly Meissen was not a medium for religious art; and the figure is more irreverent than any attempt at serious description can convey.

There is a charming series of French criers, taken, improved even, from prints; and, most remarkable of all, two figures from Chardin translated into china. Of these delightful renderings of the chiffonniers de la Vie Privee one shows a lady in full dress, pausing from the toy spinning wheel on the table beside her to read, but forgetting her book as her eyes gaze into space and she dreams of the absent. The other, a bourgeoise, is making up her books for the day; at her feet lie parcels tied up in blue paper and string, a sugar loaf prominent among them, and her table of white and gold, a Louis XV. that many a connoisseur would prize. These groups, like others among those already mentioned, will open the eyes of the student to the field of beauty and of interest, not only to the collector, but to the lover of life and manners, that lies open in the delicate though often frivolous work of the courtly potters of the eighteenth century.

Canada's Enlistments.

Hon. Arthur Sifton, answering Brig.-Gen. Griesbach in the House of Commons, stated that there were 590,572 enlistments in Canada for the Canadian expeditionary forces from 1914 to 1919. Hon. Mr. Sifton added that no definite information could be given until all the documents had been returned from overseas, but he gave the following returns for enlistments from 1914 to November 15, 1919, obtained from returns rendered by telegraph and allotted to the provinces from which such recruits were obtained: Ontario, 245,674; Quebec, 82,793; New Brunswick, 25,864; Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, 33,342; Manitoba, 66,319; Saskatchewan, 37,542; Alberta, 45,146; British Columbia, 51,438; Yukon, 2,327. Total, 590,572.

There were a total of 60,224 C.E.F. pensioners in Canada as at January 1, 1920, Gen. Griesbach was informed. These were divided among the provinces as follows:—Ontario, 26,660; Quebec, 6,111; Manitoba, 5,411; British Columbia, 6,436; Prince Edward Island, 384; New Brunswick, 2,053; Nova Scotia, 5,215.

The total amount paid to these pensioners to January 1, 1920, was $11,949,043.84, divided by provinces as follows:—Ontario $5,091,200.60; Quebec, $1,212,483.63; Manitoba, $1,073,596.51; Alberta, $1,243,832.29; Saskatchewan, $999,709.85; British Columbia, $1,276,986.76; Prince Edward Island, $76,189.44; New Brunswick, $407,335.73; Nova Scotia, $657,729.15.

"A Man's a Man."

After reading Winston Churchill's remark that labor is not fit to govern the country, Baron Morris, the former Premier of Newfoundland, speaking as the guest of the London Commercial Club, is reported to have said: "I am quite satisfied that among the masses of this country, or indeed of any country, men could be found as well able to govern as in any other class. Some day the labor and industrial classes will find with what little wisdom the world is governed." It is indeed encouraging to hear a man of the wide experience which Lord Morris has enjoyed expressing these liberal views, which echo the great truth that " a man's a man for a' that."

Late King Edward's Dog.

Edward VII.'s famous dog, Caesar, which followed immediately behind the coffin at the royal funeral, is immortalized in the new tomb in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, which is about to be unveiled.

At the foot of the recumbent effigy of the King there lies the little wire-haired terrier in marble, coiled up to sleep.

Advertising!

THE biggest men in the country have found that the easiest way to spell success is to A-D-V-E-R-T-I-S-E. Suppose the newspaper did not publish the news, how would the people know what is happening? If you don't publish the Store News how will the people know about your goods? You can never sell the goods people do not know you have.

Advertising is telling about your stock. The firm that advertises gets ahead, every time, of the firm that does not advertise. Shop-worn and out-of-date stock is the penalty merchants pay for not advertising.

Annual Convention

The North Fredericksburgh Sunday School Association will hold its annual convention in Bethany Church on Thursday, June 10th. An attractive programme has been prepared for the meeting. Afternoon session at 2 p. m.. Evening session at 7.30 p. m. The ladies of Bethany church will serve supper in the Orange Hall.

Ministerial Association.

The Lennox and Addington Ministerial Association held its regular monthly meeting in Grace Church Parlor, on Monday afternoon, May 31st. Rev. Dr. Shorey delivered a well thought out and thought provoking lecture on "Modern Thought." The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in Rev. W. P. Rogers, B.A., being re-elected president, Rev. A. J. Wilson, B.A., B.D., being elected secretary-treasurer, and Rev. T. H. P. Anderson being elected vice-president.

Notice of Public Meeting.

A meeting of the Women Teachers of Lennox and Addington will be held in the Historical Hall, Napanee, at 8 p.m. on Friday evening, June 4th, to organize a Federation of Women Teachers. Will all who are interested in such a federation kindly accept this invitation and come prepared to help make the meeting a success ?

The Big Circus.

No matter what engagements you may have made for Monday, June 7th, the day and date that Howe's Great London Shows will exhibit in Napanee, break them now. Even if you can not attend the afternoon or evening performance you can ill afford to miss viewing the gorgeous street parade at 10.00 a.m., and the thrilling free out-of-doors exhibition to be given immediately afterwards on the show grounds, and again at 6.30 p.m. If necessary, miss former, but not later, which will prove the biggest surprise treat of the year. M'lle Zizzi, one of the fairest of daughters of France, has been especially engaged by Howe's Great London Shows to "span death's arch" upon a slender bicycle and this she does twice daily. This is an act which has never been attempted before by any woman, even the most fearless of whom gasp with horror every time they witness it. What no other lady cyclist would ever dream of trying, M'lle Zizzi accomplishes every week-day morning and evening with as much unconcern as the average person would exhibit when partaking of dinner. Ascending a tall fragile wooden incline plane to the top, mounting a light bike and riding towards the earth at a triffic speed, then arching a 55-foot death gap and landing upon the other side in safety, is the frightful feat executed by this intrepid beauty. There is absolutely no charge made, it is presented in the open air as stated above, free to all who will visit the show lot.

If you are tired out from business worries, go and see Arthur Edmondson, of the Merchant's Bank in "Why She Loved Him," you will laugh, you can't help it.

LINKED TO TROPICS.

Train to Run From Winnipeg to Guatemala.

Within the next six months it will be possible to travel by rail all the way from Winnipeg to Guatemala City. After several years' delay construction of a railroad bridge across the Suachi river, which marks the boundary between Mexico and Guatemala, has been started, and it is expected that it will be finished by June 15. This bridge will afford a connecting link between the Pan-American Railroad and the International Railways of Central America.

More than ten years ago the Pan-American Railroad was completed to Ayutla, on the Guatemalan border. The extension of the Guatemala Central, now a part of the International Railways of Guatemala, was constructed from Champerico to a point on the Suachi river, just opposite Ayutla. This road passes through the heart of the coffee-growing regions of Guatemala. It connects at Salose with the main line of railroad that runs to Port Barrios, traversing the country from north to south.

The Pan-American Railroad runs from San Geronimo, on the National Tehuantepec Railroad, to Ayutla. This line was constructed by American interests during the latter years of the administration of the late President Porfirio Diaz. It was sold by the original owners to David F. Thompson, former American Ambassador to Mexico, and associates, and they in turn disposed of it to the Mexican Government for $11,000,000. During the long revolutionary period the line has deteriorated physically to such an extent that much of it will have to be rebuilt.

This condition is also true of the National Tehuantepec Railroad, which spans the isthmus of that name, running from Salina Cruz to Puerto Mexico. Connecting the National Tehuantepec with the Mexican (Vera Cruz) Railroad and the Interoceanic Railway is the Vera Cruz to Pacific line, which is also in such bad shape physically as to be hardly passable.

In the days of peace, immediately preceding the beginning of the revolutionary period, plans were well advanced for establishing a through passenger train service between points in the United States and Guatemala City. These through trains were to have been put on as soon as the bridge across the Suachi river was built. It was expected that the all-rail route would be largely patronized by American winter tourists.

When the Pan-American Railroad was conceived and built it was planned by its promoters to extend it through Guatemala, Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica to the Isthmus of Panama. Inability to obtain concessions for the proposed road from the Governments of some of these Central American countries blocked the project.

IS GLAD SHE TOOK FRIEND'S ADVICE

Toronto Woman Restored to Health by Taking Tanlac—Delighted to Recommend It

Although it is more than a year now since Mrs. Elsie Mavor, of 11 Mallon ave. Toronto, Ont., Canada, realized the wonderful powers of Tanlac, she still finds pleasure in praising it, for she says it was the means of restoring her to health when she was in an extremely weak and run down condition. In the course of conversation with the Tanlac representative at Tamblyn's Drug Store, Mrs. Mavor said:

"When I look back on those two years of suffering and ill health I realize what a boon Tanlac has been to me. I was in an extremely run down condition. In extremely run down condition. My appetite was feeble, and although not troubled with indigestion, I had to eat sparingly or my liver would get out of order. I was continually having such frightful headaches that I would simply have to give up and lie down. I had severe pains in my back, especially whenever I went to stoop over. I hardly knew how to get through the day and my sleep was so broken that I would rise in the mornings feeling tired and heavy.

"It was a friend of mine who advised me to try Tanlac, and as she herself had tried it with excellent results, I decided to take her advice and I am very thankful I did. In a very short time I knew the medicine was doing me good for my appetite picked up wonderfully and I felt so much better and stronger. By the time I had got through the second bottle all my aches and pains had disappeared and I have been well ever since. I can sleep fine, eat well and am so much stronger that I can do all my housework with perfect ease. It is over a year now since I stopped taking Tanlac but am so delighted with what it did for me that I take pleasure in recommending it."

Tanlac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON. (advt)

The "Barnet" Refrigerator Protects Health

If a record could be kept of the number of cases of Typhoid Fever, Cholera Infantum, Stomach Diseases, etc., which are directly caused by unsanitary refrigerators, it would be appalling. Thousands of families have experienced illness, and even death, caused by unsanitary refrigerators, and have bowed their heads in submission, instead of going to the kitchen and investigating their Microbe-Reeking, Foul Smelling Refrigerators. If you investigate the careless way in which milk, for instance, is kept in so many homes, you will wonder that there are so many healthy children. Of all food products milk is the most easily tainted, and thousands upon thousands of children, and adults as well, are suffering from diseases directly traceable to refrigerator poisoned milk and foods. These are serious statements, but they are absolutely true, and the fact the Barnet Refrigerator is so highly endorsed by the Medical profession, is a strong evidence that the Barnet Refrigerator is Hygenic and a safeguard to the Health. It is aseptic because an unbroken stream of cold Dry Air is constantly circulating throughout the Refrigerator.

One of these Refrigerators in our window will be locked and sealed on June 10th by F. G. Dunning, the representative of the "Barnet" Refrigerator Co. There will be placed in it—Milk, Onions, Fish, Butter, Matches, Salt, Fruit, Cigars, Candy, Cakes, etc. It will be opened for Public Inspection by two of our townsmen, on SATURDAY, June 12th, at 3 p.m. All are cordially invited to come and bring their friends and see conditions of food, consumption of ice, etc.

CHAPTER I.

The Ray of Sunlight.

Just as the rays of the afternoon sun hesitated to enter the open door of Joseph Stagg's hardware store in Sunrise Cove and lingered on the sill, so the little girl in the black frock and hat, with twin braids of sunshiny hair on her shoulders, hovered at the entrance of the dim and dusty place.

She carried a satchel in one hand, while the fingers of the other were hooked into the rivet-studded collar of a mottled, homely mongrel dog.

"Oh, dear me, Prince!" sighed the little girl, "this must be the place. We'll just have to go in. Of course I know he must be a nice man; but he's such a stranger."

Her feet faltered over the door sill and paced slowly down the shop between long counters. She saw no clerk.

At the back of the shop was a small office closed in with grimy windows. The uncertain visitor and her canine companion saw the shadowy figure of a man inside the office, sitting on a high stool and bent above a big ledger. The dog, however, scented something else.

In the half darkness of the shop he and his little mistress came unexpectedly upon what Prince considered his arch-enemy. There rose up on the end of the counter nearest the open office door a big, black tomcat whose arched back, swollen tail and yellow eyes blazed defiance.

"Ps-s-st—ye-ow!"

The rising yowl broke the silence of the shop like a trumpet call. The little girl dropped her bag and seized the dog's collar with both hands.

"Prince!" she cried, "don't you speak to that cat—don't you dare speak to it!"

"Bless me!" croaked a voice from the office.

The tomcat uttered a second "ps-s-ct—ye-ow!" and shot up a ladder to the top shelf.

"Bless me!" repeated Joseph Stagg, taking off his eyeglasses and leaving them in the ledger to mark his place. "What have you brought that dog in here for?"

He came to the office door.

"I—I didn't have any place to leave him," was the hesitating reply.

"Hum! Did your mother send you for something?

"No-o, sir," sighed the little visitor. At that moment a more daring ray of sunlight found its way through the transom over the store door and lit up the dusky place. It fell upon the slight, black-frocked figure and for one instant touched the pretty head as with an aureole.

"Bless me, child!" exclaimed Mr. Stagg. "Who are you?"

The flowerlike face of the little girl quivered, the blue eyes spilled big drops over her cheeks. She approached Mr. Stagg, stooping and squinting in the office doorway, and placed a timid hand upon the broad band of black crepe he wore on his coatsleeve.

"You're not Hannah's Carlyn?" questioned the hardware dealer huskily.

"I'm Carlyn May Cameron," she confessed. "You're not Uncle Joe. I'm very glad to see you, Uncle Joe, and—and I hope—you're glad to see me—and, Prince," she finished rather falteringly.

"Bless me!" murmured the man again.

Nothing so startling as this had entered Sunrise Cove's chief "hardware emporium" for many and many a year.

Hannah Stagg, the latter's dry goods merchant's only sister, had gone away from home quite fifteen years previously. Mr. Stagg had never seen Hannah again; but this slight, blue-eyed, sunny-haired girl was a replica of his sister, and in some dusty corner of Mr. Stagg's heart there dwelt a very faithful memory of Hannah.

Nothing had served to estrange the brother save time and distance.

"Hannah's Carlyn," muttered Mr. Stagg again. "Bless me, child! how did you get here from New York?"

"On the cars, uncle. You see, Mr. Price thought I'd better come. He says you are my guardian—it's in papa's will and would have been so in mamma's will, if she'd made one. Mr. Price put me on the train and the conductor took care of me.

"Who is Mr. Price?" the storekeeper asked.

"He's a lawyer. He's written you a long letter about it. It's in my bag. Didn't you get the telegram he sent you last evening, Uncle Joe? A 'night letter,' he called it."

"Never got it," replied Mr. Stagg shortly.

"Well, you see, when papa and mamma had to go away so suddenly they left me with the Prices. I go to school with Edna Price and she slept with me at night in our flat—after the Dunraven sailed."

"But—what did this lawyer send you up here for?" asked Mr. Stagg.

The question was a poser and Carolyn May stammered: "I—I— Don't guardians always take their little girls home and look out for them?"

"Hum—I don't know." The hardware merchant mused grimly. "I—I guess we'd better go up to The Corners and see what Aunty Rose has to say about it. You understand, I couldn't really keep you if she says 'No!'"

"Oh, Uncle Joe, couldn't you?"

"No," he declared, wagging his head decidedly. "And what she'll say to that dog—"

"Oh!" Carolyn May cried again, and put both arms suddenly about the neck of her canine friend. "Prince is just the best dog, Uncle Joe."

Mr. Stagg shook his head doubtfully. Then he went into the office and shut the big ledger into the safe. After locking the safe door, he slipped the key into his trousers pocket and glanced around the store.

"I'd like to know where that useless Gormley boy is now," muttered Mr. Stagg.

"Chet! Hey! you Chet!"

To Carolyn May's amusement and to the utter mystification of Prince, a section of the floor under their feet began to rise.

"Oh, mercy me!" squealed the little girl, and she hopped off the trapdoor; but the dog uttered a quick, threatening growl and put his muzzle to the widening aperture.

"Hey! call off that dog!" begged a muffled voice from under the trapdoor. "He'll eat me up, Mr. Stagg."

"Lie down, Prince!" commanded Carolyn May hastily. "It's only a boy. You know you like boys, Prince," she urged.

"Come on up out o' that cellar, Chet. I'm going up to The Corners with my little niece—Hannah's Carlyn. This is Chetwood Gormley. If he ever stops growin' longitudinally mebbe he'll be a man some day and not a giant. You stay right here and tend store while I'm gone, Chet."

Carolyn May could not help feeling some surprise at the finally revealed proportions of Chetwood Gormley. He was lathlike and gawky, with very prominent upper front teeth, which gave a sort of bow-window appearance to his wide mouth. But there was a good-humored twinkle in the over-grown boy's shallow eyes; and, if uncouth, he was kind.

"I'm proud to know ye, Carlyn," he said. He stepped quickly out of the way of Prince when the latter started for the front of the store.

Once out of the shop in the sunlit street, the little girl breathed a sigh of relief. Mr. Stagg, peering down at her sharply, asked:

"What's the matter?"

"I—I— Your shop is awful dark, Uncle Joe," she confessed. "I can't seem to look up in there."

"'Look up'?" repeated the hardware dealer, puzzled.

"Yes, sir. My papa says never to get in any place where you can't look up and see something brighter and better ahead," said Carolyn May softly. "He says that's what makes life worth living."

"Oh, he does, does he?" grunted Mr. Stagg.

He noticed the heavy bag in her hand and took it from her. Instantly her released fingers stole into his free hand. Mr. Stagg looked down at the little hand in his palm, somewhat startled and not a little dismayed.

The main street of Sunrise Cove on this warm afternoon was not thronged with shoppers. Not many people noticed the tall, shambling, round-shouldered man in rusty black, with the petite figure of the child and the mongrel dog passing that way, though a few idle shopkeepers looked after the trio in surprise. But when Mr. Stagg and his companions turned into the pleasantly shaded street that led out of town towards The Corners—where was the Stagg homestead—Carolyn May noticed her uncle become suddenly flustered. She saw the blood flood into his face and neck, and she felt his hand loosen as though to release her own. The little girl looked ahead curiously at the woman who was approaching.

"Oh! Who Is That Lady, Uncle Joe?

She was not a young woman—that is, not what the child would call young. Carolyn May thought she was very nice looking—tall and robust. Her brown eyes flashed an inquiring glance upon Carolyn May, but she did not look at Mr. Stagg, nor did Mr. Stagg look at her.

"Oh! who is that lady, Uncle Joe?" asked the little girl when they were out of earshot.

"Hum!" Her uncle's throat seemed to need clearing. "That—that is Mandy Parlow—Miss Amanda Parlow," he corrected himself with dignity.

The flush did not soon fade out of his face as they went on in silence.

It was half a mile from Main street to The Corners. There was tall timber all about Sunrise Cove, which was built along the shore of a deep inlet cutting in from the great lake, whose blue waters sparkled as far as one might see towards the south and west.

Uncle Joe assured Carolyn May when she asked him, that from the highest hill in sight one could see only the lake and the forest—clothed hills and valleys.

"There's lumber camps all about. Mebbe they'll interest you. Lots of building going on all the time, too." he confessed faintly.

He told her, as they went along, of the long trains of cars and of the strings of barges going out of the Cove, all laden with timber and sawed boards, millstuffs, ties and telegraph poles.

They came to the last house in the row of dwellings on this street, on the very edge of the town. Carolyn May saw that attached to the house was a smaller building, facing the roadway, with a wide-open door, through which she glimpsed benches and sawed lumber, while to her nostrils was wafted a most delicious smell of shavings.

"Oh, there's a carpenter shop!" exclaimed Carolyn May. "And is that the carpenter, Uncle Joe?"

A tall old man, lean-faced and closely shaven, with a hawk's-beak nose straddled by a huge pair of silver-bowed spectacles, came out of the shop at that moment, a jackknife in his hand. He saw Mr. Stagg and, turning sharply on his heel, went indoors again.

"Who is he, Uncle Joe?" repeated the little girl. "And, if I asked him, do you s'pose he'd give me some of those nice, long, curly shavings?"

"That's Jed Parlow—and he wouldn't give you any shavings; especially after having seen you with me," said the hardware merchant brusquely.

The pretty lady whose name was Parlow and the queer-looking old carpenter, whose name was likewise Parlow, would neither look at Uncle Joe! Even such a little girl as Carolyn May could see that her uncle and the Parlows were not friendly.

By and by they came in sight of The Corners—a place where another road crossed this one at right angles.

In one corner was a white church with a square tower and green blinds. In another of the four corners was set a big store, with a covered porch all across the front, on which were sheltered certain agricultural tools.

There was no sound of life at The Corners save a rhythmic "clank, clank, clank" from the blacksmith shop on the third corner.

On the fourth corner of the cross-roads stood the Stagg homestead—a wide, low-roofed house of ancient appearance, yet in good repair. Neatness was the keynote of all about the place.

"Is this where you live, Uncle Joe?" asked Carolyn May breathlessly. "Oh, what a beautiful big place! It seems awful big for me to live in!"

Mr. Stagg had halted at the gate and now looked down upon Carolyn May with perplexed brow. "Well, we've got to see about that first," he muttered. "There's Aunty Rose—"

A voice calling, "Chuck! Chuck! Chuck-a-chuck!" came from behind the old house. A few white-feathered fowls that had been in sight scurried wildly away in answer to the summons.

Mr. Stagg, still looking at the little girl, set down the bag and reached for the dog's leash. The loop of the latter he passed around the gatepost.

"I tell you what it is, Carlyn May. You'd better meet Aunty Rose first alone. I've my fears about this mongrel."

"Oh, Uncle Joe!" quivered his niece.

"You go ahead and get acquainted with her," urged Mr. Stagg. "She don't like dogs. They chase her chickens and run over her flower beds. Aunty Rose is peculiar, I might say."

"Oh, Uncle Joe!" repeated the little girl faintly.

"You've got to make her like you, if you want to live here," the hardware dealer concluded firmly.

He gave Carolyn May a little shove up the path and then stood back and mopped his brow with his handkerchief. Prince strained at the leash and whined, wishing to follow his little mistress.

Mr. Stagg said: "You'd better keep mighty quiet, dog. If you want your home address to be The Corners, sing small!"

Carolyn May did not hear this, but disappeared after the fowls around the corner of the wide, vine-draped porch. The pleasant back yard was full of sunshine. On the gravel path beyond the old well, with its long sweep and bucket, half a hundred chickens, some guineas and a flock of turkeys scuffled for grain which was being thrown to them from an open pan.

That pan was held in the plump hand of a very dignified-looking woman, dressed in drab and with a sunbonnet on her head.

Aunty Rose's appearance smote the little girl with a feeling of awe.

There was no frown on her face; it was only calm, unruffled, unemotional. It simply seemed as though nothing, either material or spiritual, could ruffle the placidity of Aunty Rose Kennedy.

She came of Quaker stock and the serenity of body and spirit taught by the sect built a wall between her and everybody else.

"Child, Who Are You?" Asked Aunty Rose With Some Curiosity.

"Child, who are you?" asked Aunty Rose with some curiosity.

The little girl told her name; but perhaps it was her black frock and hat that identified her in Aunty Rose's mind after all.

"You are Hannah Stagg's little girl," she said.

"Yes'm—if you please," Carolyn May confessed faintly.

"And how came you here alone?"

"If you please, Uncle Joe said I'd better probly come ahead and get acquainted with you first."

"First? What do you mean, 'first?'" asked Aunty Rose sternly.

"First—before you saw Prince," responded the perfectly frank little girl. "Uncle Joe thought maybe you wouldn't care for dogs."

"Dogs!"

OWES HER LIFE TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

After Years of Suffering with Dyspepsia, Fruit Medicine Gave Relief

MLLE ANTOINETTE BOUCHER

917 Dorion St., Montreal.

"I am writing to tell you that I owe my life to 'Fruit-a-tives' for this remedy relieved me when I had abandoned all hope of ever recovering my health.

I suffered terribly with Dyspepsia. I had it for years and all the medicines I took did not do me any good.

I read something about 'Fruit-a-tives' being good for all Stomach Troubles and Disorders of Digestion so I tried them. After finishing a few boxes, I was entirely relieved of the Dyspepsia and my general health was restored.

I thank the great fruit medicine, 'Fruit-a-tives', for this wonderful relief."

Mlle ANTOINETTE BOUCHER.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa, Ont.

"No, ma'am. And of course where I live Prince has to live too. So—"

"So you brought your dog?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Of course," said Aunty Rose composedly, "I expected you to come here. I do not think what Joseph Stagg expected. But I did not suppose you would have a dog. Where is Joseph Stagg?"

"He—he's coming."

"With the dog?"

"Yes, ma'am."

Aunty Rose seemed to take some time to digest this; but she made no further comment in regard to the matter, only saying:

"Let us go into the house, Carlyn May. You must take off your hat and bathe your face and hands."

Carolyn May Cameron followed the stately figure of Aunty Rose Kennedy into the blue-and-white kitchen of the old house, with something of the feeling of a culprit on the way to the block.

Such a big kitchen as it was! The little girl thought it must be almost as big as her whole apartment in Harlem "put together."

The little girl took off her plain black hat, smoothed back her hair and patted it smooth with her hands, then plunged her hands and face into the basin of cool water Aunty Rose had drawn for her at the sink. The dust was all washed away and a fresh glow came into her cherrylike face. Aunty Rose watched her silently.

Such a dignified, upright, unresponsive woman as she seemed standing there! And so particular, neat and immaculate was this kitchen!

Carolyn May, as she dried her face and hands, heard a familiar whine at the door. It was Prince. She wondered if she had at all broken the ice for him with Aunty Rose.

"Oh," the little girl mused, "I wonder what she will say to a mongorel."

CHAPTER II.

Going to Bed.

Mr. Stagg had fastened Prince's strap to the porch rail and he now came in with the bag.

"Is that all the child's baggage, Joseph Stagg?" asked Aunty Rose, taking it from his hand.

"Why—why, I never thought to ask her," the man admitted. "Have you a trunk check, Carlyn?"

"No, sir."

"They sent you up here with only that bag?" Mr. Stagg said with some exasperation. "Haven't you got any clothes but those you stand in?"

"Mrs. Price said—said they weren't suitable," explained the little girl. "You see, they aren't black."

"Oh!" exploded her uncle.

"You greatly lack tact, Joseph Stagg," said Aunty Rose, and the hardware dealer cleared his throat loudly as he went to the sink to perform his pre-supper ablutions. Carolyn May did not understand just what the woman meant.

"Ahem!" said Uncle Joe gruffly. "S'pose I ought t've read that letter before. What's come of it, Carlyn May?"

But just then the little girl was so deeply interested in what Aunty Rose was doing that she failed to hear him. Mrs. Kennedy brought out of the pantry a tin pie plate, on which were scraps of meat and bread, besides a goodly marrow bone.

"If you think the dog is hungry, Carlyn May," she said, "you would better give him this before we break our fast."

"Oh, Aunty Rose!" grasped the little girl, her sober face all a-smile. "He'll be de-light-ed."

She carried the pan out to Prince.

When the door closed again, Mrs. Kennedy went to the stove and instantly, with the opening of the oven, the rush of delicious odor from it made Carolyn May's mouth fairly water.

Such flaky biscuit—two great pans full of the brown beauties! Mr. Stagg sat down at the table and actually smiled.

The little girl took her indicated place at the table timidly.

"Joseph Stagg," said Aunty Rose, sitting down, "ask a blessing."

Uncle Joe's harsh voice seemed suddenly to become gentle as he reverently said grace.

Mr. Stagg was in haste to eat and get back to the store. "Or that Chet Gormley will try and make a meal out of some of the hardware, I guess," he said gloomily.

"Oh, dear me, Uncle Joe!" exclaimed Carolyn May. "If he did that, he'd die of indigestion."

"Huh! Oh! I guess 'twould cause indigestion," agreed her uncle.

Aunty Rose did not even smile.

"Bless me!" Mr. Stagg exclaimed suddenly. "What's that on the mantel, Aunty Rose? That yaller letter?"

"A telegram for you, Joseph Stagg," replied the old lady composedly.

"Well!" muttered the hardware dealer, and Carolyn May wondered if he were not afraid to express just the emotion he felt at that instant. His face was red and he got up clumsily to secure the sealed message.

"Who brought it, and when?" he asked finally, having read the lawyer's night letter.

"A boy. This morning," said Aunty Rose, utterly calm.

"And I never saw it this noon," grumbled the hardware dealer.

Mrs. Kennedy quite ignored any suggestion of impatience in Mr. Stagg's voice or manner. But he seemed to lose taste for his supper after reading the telegram.

"Where is the letter that this Mr. Price wrote and sent by you, Carlyn?" he asked as he was about to depart for the store.

The little girl asked permisson to leave the table and then ran to open her bag. Mr. Stagg said doubtfully:

"I s'pose you'll have to put her somewhere for the night. I don't see what else we can do, Aunty Rose."

"You may be sure, Joseph Stagg, that her room was ready for her a week ago," Mrs. Kennedy rejoined, quite unruffled.

The surprised hardware dealer gurgled something in his throat. "What room?" he finally stammered.

"That which was her mother's, Hannah Stagg's room. It is just as it was and she will come to no harm there."

"Hannah's!" exclaimed Mr. Stagg. "Why, that ain't been slept in since she went away."

"It is quite fit, then," said Aunty Rose, "that it should be used for her child. Trouble nothing about things that do not concern you, Joseph Stagg," she added with, perhaps, additional firmness.

Carolyn May did not hear this. She now produced the letter from her lawyer.

"There it is, Uncle Joe," she said. "I—I guess he tells you all about me in it."

"Hum!" said the hardware man, clearing his throat and picking up his hat. "I'll read it down at the store."

"Shall I see you again to-night, Uncle Joe?" the little girl asked wistfully. "You know, my bedtime's half-past eight."

"Well, if you don't see me tonight again, you may well cared for, I haven't a doubt," said Uncle Joe shortly, and went out.

Carolyn May went soberly back to her chair. She did not eat much more. Somehow there seemed to be a big lump in her throat which she could not force the food. As the dusk fell, the spirit of loneliness gripped her and the tears pooled behind her eyelids, ready to pour over her cheeks at the slightest "jiggle." Yet she was not usually a "cry-baby" girl.

Aunty Rose was watching her more closely than Carolyn May supposed. After her third sip of tea she arose and began quietly clearing the table. The newcomer was nodding in her place, her blue eyes clouded with sleep and unhappiness.

"It is time for you to go to bed, Carlyn May," said Aunty Rose firmly. "I will show you the room Hannah Stagg had for her own when she was a girl."

"Thank you, Aunty Rose," said the little girl humbly.

She picked up the bag and followed the stately old woman into the back hall and up the stairway into the ell. Carolyn May saw that at the foot of the stairs was a door leading out upon the porch which Prince was now moaning about uneasily at the end of his leash. She would have liked to say "good night" to Prince, but it seemed better not to mention this feeling to Aunty Rose.

The fading hues of sunset in the sky gave the little girl plenty of light to undress by. She thought the room very beautiful, too.

"Do you need any help, child?" asked Mrs. Kennedy, standing in her soldierly manner in the doorway. It was dusky there and the little girl could not see her face.

"Oh, no, ma'am," said Carolyn May faintly.

Very well," said Aunty Rose and turned away. Carolyn May stood in the middle of the room and listened to her descending footsteps. Aunty Rose had not even bidden her good night!

Like a marooned sailor upon a desert island the little girl went about exploring the bedroom which was to be hers—and which had once been her mother's. That fact fascinated her. Then she looked at the high, puffy bed. "How ever can I get into it?" sighed Carolyn May.

She had to stand upon her tiptoes in her fluffy little bedroom slippers to pull back the quilt and the blanket and sheet underneath it. The bed was just a great big bag of feathers!

"Just like a big, big pillow," thought the little girl. "And if I do get into it I'm like to sink down and down and down till I'm buried, and won't ever be able to get up in the morning."

The window was open and she went to it and looked out. A breath of honeysuckle blew in. Then, below, on the porch, she heard the uneasy movements of Prince. And he whined.

"Oh, poor Prince! He doesn't know what's become of me," thought Carolyn May.

Downstairs, in the great kitchen, Aunty Rose was stepping back and forth, from table to sink, from sink to dresser, from dresser to pantry. As the daylight faded she lit the lamp which swung from the ceiling and gave light to all the room.

It would have been impossible for the wisest person to guess what were the thoughts in Aunty Rose's mind.

A glad little yelp from the dog tied to the rail of the porch sounded suddenly. Even Aunty Rose could not mistake that cry of welcome and she knew very little about dogs—to their credit, at least. She had heard no other suspicious sound, but now she crossed the room with firm tread and opened the porch door. Yes, a little white figure was down there hugging the whining mongrel.

Carolyn May's tearful face was raised from Prince's rough neck.

"Oh, Aunty Rose! Oh, Aunty Rose!" she sobbed. "I just had to say good night to somebody. Edna's mother came and heard our prayers and tucked us into my bed after my papa and mamma went away. So it didn't seem so bad.

"But tonight—why! tonight there isn't anybody cares whether I go to bed or not! But Prince! Prince, he knows just how—how empty I feel!"

"You would better come in now and wash your face and hands again before going to bed. That dog has been lapping them with his tongue."

Sobbing, the little girl obeyed. Then she would have gone back up the stairs without a word had not Aunty Rose spoken.

"Come here, Carolyn May," she said quite as sternly as before.

The little girl approached her. The old lady sat in one of the straightest of the straight-backed chairs, her hands in her comfortable lap. The wet blue eyes were raised to her composed face timidly.

"If you wish to say your prayers here, before going upstairs, you may, Carolyn May," she said.

"Dance Men."

The "danceman," evolved from the "footman" through a generation of cabaret hunting society leaders, is the latest addition to the smart matron's retinue.

The danceman is required to be good looking, to wear clothes well, dance better, and above all to be of a type that guarantees the respectability of the lady employing him.

He follows his patron at a distance of a yard or so, sits a few feet away from the tea table, moving only when requested by madame to take a turn around the hall.

As it is not considered good form to speak to the danceman, Paris madame are at last able to devote their attention to acquiring the fanciful steps without incurring the displeasure of their husbands, because a paid servant is not considered a man.

No Canadian Veto.

In the House of Commons recently Hon. N. W. Rowell stated that the Canadian Government was not aware that the British House had been prevented from arriving at a decision on the sending of a mission to the Vatican because of fault on the part of the Dominion to give their views on the matter. The Government, he said, had been invited to give its views and conformed with this request on December 6, 1919. The Government had not sufficient information to justify its offering advice on the matter.

CONSTRUCTION OF A HOTBED.

Work Should Be Carried Out Early for Best Results.

Seeds of cabbage, cauliflower, tomatoes, egg plants, peppers, celery and lettuce, if sown in a hotbed early will produce good thrifty plants for setting out in the garden by the last of May or first of June.

A standard frame 9 feet by 6 feet, with three 3 x 6 feet sash, will produce enough plants for the average garden. A small bed covered by a single standard sash 3 x 6 feet will do if some extra cold frames are available; the frame being made to suit the sash. The frame should be one foot high at the south side or end, and slope upward so that the north side is six inches higher. This is to shed the rain and to catch more rays of sunlight. See that the sash fits snugly.

Protect the bed from cold winds. The south side of a shed or building, or even a board fence, is an ideal position. Place conveniently to permit of daily watering and attention.

Fresh horse manure is the best material for heating the bed. The manure should be well mixed by forking over at least twice, leaving it to stand in a heap until well heated. After two or three days place it in position for the bed. A pit may be made to hold the manure, but the usual practice is to build on top of the ground. In any case, a depth of one and one-half feet of manure should be used. This is best if put on in layers and well tramped down, making the bed at least two feet wider and longer than the frame. The frame is then placed in the centre and more manure banked around the outside until even with the top of the frame. The sash may be put on now and left until the manure has become thoroughly heated, then four to six inches of some good, rich garden soil, with well-rotted manure in it, should be put on. The soil should be well worked down and raked fine before sowing the seed. The temperature of the soil should be below 80 degrees F. before the seeds are sown. Give careful attention to watering and ventilation. Watering when necessary should be done during the morning on bright days. The sash may be raised during warm, bright days.

HANDLING OF MALE LAMBS.

Docking and Castrating Will Pay Later On.

The importance of castrating all male lambs not intended for breeding purposes is being appreciated more and more each year. However, a visit to many of the larger sheep farms in the autumn will reveal the fact that there is still considerable neglect in this regard. Very few farmers would consider marketing their hogs and steer animals entire, and yet on these same farms no thought is given to docking the lambs. Not only are buck lambs discounted in price, but they will not settle down and fatten as contentedly as wethers.

When the lambs are from ten days to two weeks old is the best time to perform this operation. They are then strong enough to withstand the slight shock, and there will be less danger and suffering than if left later. Collect the lambs to be castrated in a pen by themselves, which is well bedded and clean.

The operator should make sure that his hands and the castrating knife are clean. The use of a few drops of carbolic acid or other disinfectant in the water is a safe precaution. The lower end of the scrotum should be cut off which will expose the testicles. These should be drawn out one at a time with the entire cord attached. The cord should not be cut off, but drawn out. The testicle of the young lamb is soft and pulpy and some difficulty may be experienced in pulling the testicle and cord with the fingers. Pinchers may be had which will perform the operation in a satisfactory manner. Another common method is for the operator to grasp the testicle with his teeth; in this way the cord can be drawn out without any danger of breaking. Those who have followed the method for some time are agreed that it is the safest and most satisfactory of any. It is well to apply some disinfectant after the operation. It will hasten healing and prevent any bad effects from dirt getting into the cut.—Bulletin 274, Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Plan to Kill Chinch Bugs.

Burning fence rows or grass around the border infested grain fields is recommended as a fall practice to destroy chinch bugs. A slow, steady flame, fanned by a slight breeze, results in the killing of from 80 to 90 per cent. of the hibernating insects; it also greatly reduces the number that would survive the winter and move to the wheat fields in the spring.

Use Waste Timber for Fuel.

On account of the scarcity of coal there will probably be a large amount of wood used as fuel this winter. Use all the waste timber, dead and dying trees for this purpose and be sure to conserve the ashes for garden fertiliser. They are rich in plant food, particularly potash.

BLOATING IN CATTLE

Gases From Fermenting Foods Create the Trouble.

The Cause and Symptoms of the Ailment Fully Described — Methods of Relief Suggested, Both Simple and Heroic.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THIS condition, known as Tympanitis, Bloating, Hoven or Blown in cattle, consists of distension of the rumen or paunch with gas. The most common cause is a sudden change from dry food to a liberal supply of green food of any kind, principally to the different varieties of clover, and more particularly when the clover is in flower. It frequently occurs from the voracity with which cattle that have been accustomed to dry food consume green fodder. Hence it is more prevalent in the spring than in other seasons. It may result from feeding too freely on green food of any kind, especially on that upon which dew or rain is present, and more particularly when frosted; hence is not uncommon in the fall when cattle are allowed to consume clover, rape, turnip tops, etc., when frosted. Any food that readily ferments, if taken in sufficient quantities to temporarily check digestion, will quickly form gases and cause bloating. It is often a complication in cases of choking, the mechanical impediment in the gullet being the direct cause by preventing escape of gas through that organ. Sudden changes of diet of any kind may cause the trouble, and insufficient secretion of saliva may have the same effect.

While some of the above-named causes usually precede an attack, it is not uncommon to notice a well-marked case for which no well-marked cause can be traced. Such cases are doubtless due to some unsuspected and not well understood temporary derangement of the digestive glands and muscular coat of the rumen. Any condition that causes torpidity of the rumen may cause bloating, even though no change of food of a dangerous nature has taken place. Torpidity of the rumen occurs in debilitating diseases, in fact in most diseases of the ox, and also from the introduction of excessively cold material, as frosted fodder, into the organ.

Symptoms.—The patient exhibits symptoms of pain and uneasiness by lying down and rising frequently, kicking at the belly, etc. Rumination is suspended and food refused. There is general depression, protrusion of the muzzle, projection and congestion of the eyes, increased flow of saliva, and usually moaning during expiration. The back is arched and there is more or less well-marked swelling of the abdomen, especially marked on the left side between the point of the hip and the last rib. If pressed with the end of the finger it will yield, but at once regain its former condition when pressure is relieved. If tapped with the fingers a resonic, tympanic or drum-like sound will be heard, hence the name "tympanitis." Distension of the rumen causes forward pressure upon the diaphragm (the muscular partition between the abdomen and lung cavity), hence lessens the space of the lung cavity and causes difficulty in respiration in proportion to the degree of bloating. Death may occur quickly from rupture of the rumen, rupture of the diaphragm, suffocation, or absorption of gases.

Treatment must be directed to remove or neutralize the gases, and prevent the formation of more. It will depend upon the severity of the attack and the degree of distension of the rumen, whether it will be wise to attempt the immediate removal of the gases by an operation, or administer drugs to neutralize them. When bloating is not excessive, with little or no danger of death occurring quickly, the administration of any drug that will neutralize the gases may and should be effective.

For this purpose oil of turpentine, commonly called "spirits of turpentine" is probably the best simple remedy. This is given in 2 to 4 oz. doses (a tablespoon holds about ½ oz.) according to the size of the patient and state of distension. This should be mixed with a pint of raw linseed oil. When this cannot be procured, melted butter or lard or new milk answers the purpose well. If necessary the dose may be repeated in one to two hours.

Carbonate of ammonia, 4 to 6 drams, or bi-carobnate of soda, (baking soda) 1 to 1½ oz. in a pint of water, also acts well, but not so surely and promptly as turpentine. It is also good practice to put a hay rope or piece of wood about 2 inches in diameter into the patient's mouth and fasten it there. This facilitates the escape of gas through the gullet.

In cases where bloating is extreme the gases should be removed by mechanical or surgical means. In some cases the passing of a rubber tube down the gullet to the rumen will give immediate relief. When this fails an opening must be made through the skin and coats of the rumen at the most prominent part in front of the crest of the left hip. The hair should be clipped off the seat of operation, and it, with the hands of the operator and instruments, disinfected with a 5 per cent. solution of Carbolic acid or one of the coal tar antiseptics. The proper instrument for this operation is a trocar and canula, but when this is not on hand an ordinary pocket-knife can be used and the lips of the wound kept apart to allow escape of the gases.

After bloating has disappeared it is good practice to administer a laxative of about 1 lb. epsom salts or 1½ pints raw linseed oil, and feed lightly for a few days.—J. H. Reed, V.S., O. A. College, Guelph.

Fowls Are Often Slighted.

Chickens are too often discriminated against when feeding at the barn is done. As a rule chickens afford the family more food and sometimes more cash for the money and time expended on them than any other live stock.

Increase Acreage of Corn.

Corn is one of our most valuable crops. It is hoped that liberal acreage is planted this year. As a feed crop it is hard to beat. It yields well on good land when the season is fair and when cultivation is ample.

AFTER GRIP or FLU

WINTER COLDS.

BAD BLOOD

You are pale, thin, weak—with little vitality. Your liver is sluggish and the bad blood causes your stomach muscles to lose their elasticity and become flabby and weak—then indigestion.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, made from wild roots and barks, and free from alcohol or narcotics, is the great and powerful blood purifier of to-day. Ingredients printed on wrapper. This tonic, in liquid or tablet form, is just what you need to give you vim, vigor and vitality.

Take the 'Discovery' as directed and it will search out impure and poisonous matter throughout the system and eliminate it through the natural channels.

You can procure a trial package of the tablets by sending 10c. to the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., or Branch Laboratory in Bridgeburg, Ontario.

SINTALUTA, SASK.—"I have taken Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for liver trouble, and found it excellent, and would not be without it. I suffered from congestion of the liver about six years ago and I always say that this medicine cured me. I have also given it to my family for colds and it cured them in a very short time. We must have used about 4 dozen bottles of the 'Discovery'."—MRS. ENOCH MITCHELL.

KITCHENER, ONT.—"I had become all run-down, was weak and nervous. My blood was bad also. I took the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and was completely restored to good health. I am always recommending this medicine to my friends, many of whom have had equally as good results."—MRS. EMIL KETTLE, 64 Breithaupt Street.

BLASTING TREE HOLES.

Where Subsoil Is Hard Clay This Method Is Valuable.

I once sat on a rail fence watching a man punch holes into the ground on my neighbor's place. At first I thought he was making holes for small posts, but found he was making blast holes for trees. I was interested and waited to see the holes after they were blown. Next morning I examined some of the bore holes and found them 2½ feet deep, penetrating the hardpan. They were large enough to receive a stick of 25 per cent. dynamite with ease.

After the blaster charged all of the holes he lighted the fuses. The first lighted ones popped before he was through lighting them all. After they all went off I found the holes to be about three feet long, three feet wide and three feet deep. I do not mean that the earth was blown out to the extent of three feet, but that the earth was loose to the depth of three feet. We took all the loose earth out of one hole and found that the subsoil was "busted." My neighbor then called his men and they started to plant the trees. There were only forty-five to be planted and so it did not take long.

One man went ahead and dug out the holes. He made two piles of the earth; one the top soil and the other the subsoil. My neighbor and his other man did the planting. The top soil was thrown back into the hole until the right depth was reached. The tree, after being cut down to a whip, was sent into it and the balance of the top soil was firmly packed around the roots. Water was then poured upon the packed soil. On top of this was thrown the heavy subsoil. After this was levelled off it was given a coating of well-rotted manure. They repeated this until the forty-five trees were planted.

My neighbor told me there were two lessons in this one day's tree-planting. The first is the use of dynamite and the second the care in planting. The dynamite cracks the subsoil so that it will be impossible for the tree to die from lack of moisture. This cracked subsoil holds the omsiture and the young tree takes it at will by sending down its fine rootlets into this subsoil. The second lesson is the replacing of the top soil for the subsoil at the root system. Top soil is better than subsoil, as it contains plant food, called humus.—F. A. Kayer, New York.

Splendid Place for Brush.

Brush and straw piles that will be in the way next spring should be hauled away and used to stop soil washing. Aside from using straw as bedding for live stock on spreading it over fields, this is the most profitable use to make of it. Everyone has seen enormous gullies cut in a single season and years spent in trying to undo the mischief. Even small gullies in pastures or meadows may often be stopped with a little straw. Even cattle paths in pastures often deepen so that they need such treatment. In other places it is necessary to plan to sow sorghum to stop washing, but if the gullies are more than a foot deep and two or three feet wide it is usually better to use brush.

The brush dam gives better results if straw is mixed with the brush to help hold the dirt. Wherever the fall is great enough to make the water energetically it is likely to be necessary to stake down the brush and straw so that they will not be washed away.

The less busy winter time should be used in active work to stop losses from soil washing and in planning next season's field work so that the fields will be planted and cultivated across the slope or around the hill. Then the rows will not run straight down the slope and thereby furnish the steepest possible channel for the run-off from rains. Those who have such winter cover crops as rye to hold the soil in place are fortunate, but those who do not should not flatter themselves that no washing is going on even in winter when there is less rainfall.

Canadian Cars.

There are at the present time 59,116 Canadian railway cars in the United States and 40,632 American cars on Canadian lines. Thus the balance in favor of the States is approximately 19,000. There are nearly 20,000 more Canadian box cars in the states than there are American cars in Canada.

Goods for Roumania.

Practically none of the Canadian exports to Roumania went through American ports, it was recently stated by Sir George Foster, Acting Prime Minister. Some 1,000 tons of goods were sent via New York, owing to better facilities for handling that class of goods.

MAKING POULTRY PAY

SEVERAL METHODS SUGGESTED FOR SAVING EXPENSE.

Co-operative Hatchery May Be Used With Good Results In Small Community, One Person Owning an Incubator, While Others Pay a Small Fee for Having Their Eggs Hatched—How to Secure Best Results.

A good way in a small community, is to let one person own and operate an incubator, the others bringing their eggs to the hatchery, and paying a small fee to get them hatched, bringing home the baby chicks when a day old. But, to the person essaying the raising of a flock of poultry all extra expense must be guarded against, because all expense has to be later deducted from whatever profit is made. Looking at it like this, it is readily seen that for anywhere round one hundred chicks or less, the expense of buying a brooder is too great, and because the little chicks need warmth, some way must be thought out. The natural method is to set a hen to hatch simultaneously with the incubator chicks, and place her with all of the chicks in a low house, with good tight roof and sides, but no floor. The house is floorless so that it may be taken up and removed to a dry, clean spot when the floor space has become dirty.

Artificial brooders to hold a small number of chicks can be made of empty cheese boxes or half barrels, lined with woollen cloths. It is not necessary to use these for very long, because as soon as the little chicks begin to feather they will covey in a corner of the house among the straw. If it is desired to get the chickens to marketable size as quickly as possible, they should not be allowed too much range.

Lady Duff Gordon furnished a symphony of richness, dignity and style in this smart frock of sand and brown hue for street or afternoon wear. The slashings and lacing furnish the color that relieves and sets off the frock and the same idea is carried out in the dainty belt.

A Good Flock.

It is advisible to have a good-sized run on each side of the chicken house, and to sow some kind of grain in one while the chickens occupy the other.

When the grain is a few inches high, turn the chickens in there, and give the other run the same treatment. Thus the birds will always have tender, green feed. And a watch must be kept for vermin. These pests, with chicken cholera to help them, will soon wipe out a promising flock. Examine the chickens frequently, to see if they are infested, and spray the house with lime as often as possible. Never leave wet feed around, more than the chickens can consume while it is warm, not being necessary. It is this cold stuff lying about that will give them cholera. But a hopper filled with dry rolled oats is needed always, if you would have fat chicks.

Seeding time is coming, and the poultry keeper with ground to spare, and who wants eggs for next winter, must prepare now for the supply of green feed for the birds. A little thought will show that in summer a hen is constantly pecking at the grass and leaves. In winter some thing must be given as a substitute, so plant mangels, sugar beets, turnips and potatoes for the flock.

Also, during summer, store a supply of light soil, as well as plenty of shell and grit, as well as some old plaster if possible. But be careful that no paint adheres to the plaster, because it is poisonous. In winter, the laying hen needs all of these substances to form the shell of the egg.

Chickens must be given no salt. It makes them drink too much and death follows. But the laying hens need a little salt in their feed each day, it makes them healthy, acting as a tonic. About every second week, a teaspoonful of sulphur to each twelve hens should be given in a wet mash. This acts as a disinfectant, and keeps the hens in good condition. If fattening fowls, place in a small run. Give plenty of water, and extra feed, allowing one pint of linseed meal to each ten pounds of feed given daily. It pays to fatten fowl for market. Plump, yellow, fleshed birds bring good prices, while the scrawny, neglected sort, almost have to be given away.

Swiss Crops.

The crops in Switzerland in 1919 were considerably below those in 1918, with the exception of the fruit crop. This was due to unfavorable atmospheric conditions, a cold and wet spring, drought in early summer and again in late summer, followed by sudden falls in temperature and early frosts, and to the fact that the acreage planted in 1919 was smaller than in 1918.

A Record In Prizes.

The secretary of the Brandon Winter Fair recently paid to James Turner, of Carrol, the sum of $1,040 as his share of the prize money won at the big Manitoba show. This amount is claimed to be the largest ever paid to one exhibitor at any show in Canada.

Grading Up a Flock.

In grading up a laying flock pure-bred eggs should be purchased. From the chicks good female breeding stock may be secured. The male may be secured in very many cases in Ontario, from eggs secured by children taking part in school fairs. Watch the school fair winners this year.

Watch for Noxious Grass.

In looking for quack grass it would be well to watch also for other noxious weeds, making sure that none go to seed and that the root stalks of perennials are prevented from spreading as much as possible.

GETTING READY FOR SUMMER

Heavy Linen, Gingham, Pongee and Taffeta Are Favorite Fabrics for Little Girls.

Among the warm weather fabrics that will be favored for the children's wardrobe may be mentioned heavy linen, gingham, especially striped and Scotch plaid weaves, natural colored pongee and taffeta. Taffeta, of course, is designed for "dress up" little miss' type, but the other materials are all washable and, therefore, in the utility or service class. For very early spring serge will play its part. Some smart little models are shown equipped with detachable guimpes of white pique.

Colored organdie is a perfectly good selection for a party frock for a little girl, regardless of season. Hand embroidery is a dainty trimming touch. Another smart touch applied to cotton fabric frocks for children is scalloped ruffles piped in self-fabric in contrasting color.

Sashes are approved by Dame Fashion for members of the younger set next season and this, of course, means that wide, gay ribbons will have a big sale.

Hair and sash ribbons to match make an ideal birthday gift.

VARIETY OF SPATS

Milady Has Choice of Footwear for All Occasions.

Gaiters Come in Shades of Fawn, Gray and White; Also in Black, Brown and Tan.

The hours of the clock are told by fashions in feminine foot wear. For morning there are English brogues in chocolate brown, light tan, Russian calf and black calfskin. The rounded brogue toe carries a wing tip and dress eyelets are "the thing" on these shoes.

If gaiters are desired they come in shades of fawn, gray and white for wear with low-heeled, wing-tipped pumps in black, brown and tan, reaching only to the spring of the instep.

The proper stockings for wear with brogues are ribbed wool, or silk and wool in plain shades or in Oxford and heather mixtures. The plain weave wool stockings are clocked in contrasting colors. Silk or French lisle stockings are worn with gaiters.

For afternoon wear there is a black vamp French heel shoe with a light gray or tan suede upper that is very attractive with dressy gowns. This model comes in patent leather and dull leather and also in brown kid.

If a Cuban heel is your choice, the straight tip tan leather shoe is smart for any daytime wear. This last is also made in black and chocolate brown.

Patent leather and brown French heel pumps without buckles are worn with spats by many smartly gowned women for afternoon wear.

The short vamp French slippers that tie on the instep are making great headway in America. They are made of suede for street wear and of black or colored satin for evening use. Worn with lace striped stockings they give the impression of smallness.

For evening wear there are high French heels and baby French heel slippers in silver, gold, brocade, velvet and satin. These slippers usually carry buckles. Rhinestone buckles are also used.

Evening stockings are sheer and the fancy lace striped varieties are in great demand. Lace stocks are also popular and sheer black stockings with lace butterfly medallions inserted in front are also seen.

This lovely white georgette and lace party frock would be the joy of any little miss.

A Puff in Disguise.

The common powder puff may be made into a small gift of real daintiness. A stick, much like the all-day sucker stick of childhood, covered with rainbow-shaded ribbon is fastened securely to the puff. Then, over the outside of the puff, sew more rainbow ribbon, adorned with tiny silk flowers. The decorative quality of the ribbon is rivaled by the usefulness of the stick.

Water-Spotted Gloves.

Don't let water spots on kid gloves dry, but while still damp keep them on the hands and rub them gently with a damp cloth.

LITTLE GIRL'S PARTY FROCK

NOTES OF FASHION

Round collars are used much in children's frocks.

The evening gown occasionally features a very light waist.

The popular lingo for skirt is eight inches from the floor.

Caramel-colored felt hats and also those in straw with footwear of the same color are apparently in high favor.

Ruffles combined with very narrow strips of leather, braided together, form whole hat crowns. To replace the leather, shiny new straw is often used.

The fashion of trimming fur cloaks with pelts running otherwise is most successful and has been adopted by a number of houses this season.

Brocades continue to be the fabric de luxe for evening gowns. This wonderful metallic fabric has inspired a chiffon broche that consists of velvet flowers or figures woven on a background of chiffon cloth.

Ribbons are employed in countless ways. Wide ribbon belts are simply knotted at the sides so that the falling loops give a pannier effect, or at the back with long trailing ends, forming a substitute for the fishtail of last season.

Paisley Vogue.

The vogue of paisley has come back, and some of the smartest of new hats are showing the use of the paisley colors and weave. You will remember that for some reason when paisley was popular a few years ago it never became popular to the extent of commonplaceness, so there is no feeling against it, as there might have been had it been run to the ground at that time.

Wandering Willie appeared at the kitchen door in search of food. Judging the housewife to be a pious woman, he professed deep religious convictions and pointed to the raggedness of his knees as evidence of his prayers for salvation. His hands laden with food, he turned away, revealing the lamentable fact that the seat of his trousers was as worn as his knees. Asked how this happened, Willie replied, "Oh, that's where I've backslid."

Everyone remembers the beautiful specialties in "The Doctor's Private Secretary." They will be even more elaborate in "Why She Loved Him." NEELY'S

On Saturday morning, Beatrice Gates, wife of Percy Valentine, of Cataraqui, formerly of Ernestown, passed away in the Kingston General Hospital, after a brief illness. The deceased was twenty-three years of age, and resided in Cataraqui. She was a daughter of the late Joseph Gates, Kingston, and is survived by her husband. By her sweet, cherry, nature and her friendly christian qualities, Mrs. Valentine had endeared herself to a host of friends, who now sorrow with her family in her early passing. She was organist in the Methodist church, as well as teacher in the Sabbath school, and her loss in the community will be keenly felt. The funeral took place from her late residence, Cataraqui, Monday afternoon.

Molasses as Auto Fuel.

The West Indian molasses that used to be turned into rum will have to be utilized in some other way, now that the United States is no longer a legitimate buyer of alcoholic drinks. Dr. Walter Baunard, writing in Sugar, thinks that it will be used to drive automobiles and for the general development of power for traction and other purposes. Not that it will ever be substituted for gasoline, in its crude form. It must first be turned into alcohol; but after this transformation its value will be greatly enhanced. Investigations carried out recently under the auspices of the British Government, indicate that the use of alcohol as a motor fuel has great possibilities, and the committee in charge suggests not only that the by-products of sugar-production be used in this way, but that many other products yielding sugar, starch, or cellulose may be similarly utilised.

Canada's Trade Growing.

A steady growth of Canada's trade in the twelve months ending February 29th last, is indicated in a statement issued by the Bureau of Statistics. Total imports for the year ending February 29 were $993,870,100, while in the previous year it was $36,266,472.

Total exports for the twelve months ending February 29 last were $1,246,341,600, as against $1,213,116,432 in the previous year. The duty collected on imports amounted to $177,766,266 in the past twelve months, as compared with $159,061,948.

During the twelve month period just ended, Canada imported from the United Kingdom goods to the value of $106,605,527 as compared with $74,806,773 in the previous twelve months. Exports to the United Kingdom were $507,081,477 during the year just ended, as compared with $546,790,141 in the previous year, a decrease of approximately $40,000,000. Imports from the United States totalled $764,185,943 during the past twelve months, which was approximately the same as during the previous twelve month period. Exports to the United States were $455,665,517, an increase of about $2,000,000 over the year ending February 28, 1919.
